

Ishkhan Khchoian

Junior Business Analyst · application

Yerevan, Armenia · open to remote · relocation possible

+374 98 60 34 64 · ishxanxchoyan@gmail.com · linkedin.com/in/ishkhan-khchoian-2419182b3

Dear [name],

I am applying for the [role] position at [company]. I am new to software business analysis and not at all new to analysis, requirements or documentation — and I would rather draw that line myself than have you guess where it sits.

For six years my profession was turning ambiguity into a document other people could act on. As a judge's associate I drafted judicial acts across 200+ parallel cases and 30+ hearings a week while covering three roles at once. I then spent years analysing civil contracts and preparing claims, where an ambiguous sentence is not untidy — it loses. Most recently, as Senior Case Manager, I owned complex client matters end to end and coordinated eight specialists, reviewing their work against written acceptance criteria.

The process half of the job is the part I enjoy most. At M&M I mapped how work actually moved, found where it broke, and rewrote the templates, checklists and hand-offs — and the team adopted the rewrite as its default. At Shamayev I built an internal training programme whose materials went on to serve more than fifty people. Documenting as-is honestly before proposing to-be is a habit, not a methodology I read about.

I have made the move into IT concrete: a U.S.-standards project management course run by the Yerevan American Corner with the U.S. Embassy, a month of C programming at 42 Yerevan alongside full-time work, second place at HackNation, and my own B2B concept around AI agents and RAG. That is enough technical footing to write a requirement an engineer can act on without a translation round.

I would welcome a conversation about the requirements your team currently finds hardest to pin down. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Ishkhan Khchoian

+374 98 60 34 64 · ishxanxchoyan@gmail.com