Dear [name],

For six years I was the person your product is built for. I am applying for the [role] position at [company].

As a paralegal and then Senior Case Manager in U.S. immigration law, I lived inside case pipelines, intake forms, evidence checklists and filing deadlines — at Shamayev Business Law Corp., where I designed and ran an internal Paralegal Academy that trained the team, and most recently at M&M Document Preparation, where I owned the firm's most complex filings from first interview to submission, up to twelve running at once, with eight paralegals reporting to me on their own caseloads.

Somewhere in that work I noticed the part I actually enjoyed was never the law. It was redesigning the workflow so a team would stop losing documents and stop redoing work. I began the move while still employed — a month of C programming at 42 Yerevan's Piscine in late 2025, fitted around a full-time job — and in February 2026 I left a stable legal career to retrain properly: a U.S.-standards project management course run by the Yerevan American Corner with the U.S. Embassy, second place at HackNation, and daily work in Jira, Confluence and Notion. I did not drift into this; I reorganised my life around it.

I am writing to [company] specifically because it sits exactly where my two halves meet. I can speak to your legal customers in their own vocabulary — I have been on their side of the screen — and translate what they say into tickets, acceptance criteria and a realistic schedule. Domain knowledge like this usually takes a new PM a year to absorb; I already have it, and what I need from you is the software delivery half.

I would be glad to walk you through how I would approach [a specific product area from the posting]. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Ishkhan Khchoian
