Dear [name],

I am applying for the [role] position at [company]. I am writing to you specifically because construction is not a sector I would be learning — it is the one I started in.

At LLC “SIS” I delivered more than fifteen construction and retail projects, at times running three sites in parallel with crews of two to twenty. I selected and chased contractors, handled procurement, materials and transport, prepared and competed in tenders, and built the first schedules and Gantt charts the projects actually ran on. Later, at Qanon Construction, I owned client communication and scope agreement from first enquiry through to delivery. I know what a supplier’s missed date does to a programme, because I have had to absorb it.

Alongside that I spent six years in law — civil-contract analysis, claims, and then international legal operations where I carried up to twelve complex client projects at once and coordinated eight specialists. On a building project the schedule and the contract are the same argument, and it is unusual to find one person who reads both. I also rewrote the internal workflow at my last company, and the rewrite became the team standard — process documentation is work I seek out rather than avoid.

For a PropTech product specifically, the useful part may be that I have been your customer: I have been the person struggling with snag lists, subcontractor scheduling and procurement paperwork, so I can run a discovery interview with a site manager without needing a glossary afterwards. In 2026 I added formal grounding — a U.S.-standards project management course run by the Yerevan American Corner with the U.S. Embassy, and a month of programming at 42 Yerevan.

I would be glad to talk about where your delivery or your product currently loses time. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Ishkhan Khchoian
