PROFILE

Operations coordinator with over ten years of keeping high-volume work moving: up to 12 client projects in parallel, 200+ live court cases, events for up to 3,000 people, and construction and retail sites run three at a time. The part of that work I am best at is the process underneath it — finding where a team loses time, writing the standard that fixes it, and training people until it is simply how things are done.

I left a stable legal career in February 2026 to do this work full time and trained in project management with a U.S. perspective. I learn an operation from the floor up first and only then change it — that is why the changes stick.

One interview is enough — give me 30 minutes and a real problem from your team, and you'll see how I work.

WHY ME FOR THIS ROLE

- Standards that stick. At M&M the workflows, templates and checklists I rewrote became the team's default way of working; at Shamayev the training program I built went on to serve 50+ people.
- Bottleneck first, then the fix. I map where work waits — for a person, a tool, a part or a decision — before proposing anything, and I make the fix measurable so it can be checked rather than argued about.
- Volume without losing track. 200+ parallel cases and 30+ hearings a week while covering three roles; up to 12 complex projects at once while coordinating 8 specialists.
- Physical operations, not just paperwork. Construction and retail sites with teams of 2–20: contractors, procurement, transport and tenders. Live events: vendors, logistics, scheduling and day-of operations. Humanitarian aid to ~100 families a day.
- Work you can see. I run work on visible boards — Kanban for the flow, Gantt charts for the schedule (I built the first ones at SIS) — so everyone knows what is next without asking.
- Three languages. Armenian and Russian native, English C1 — I work with the floor, the office and head office in whichever language they use.
