IN SHORT

I am at the start of a product career and deliberately so. What I bring to it is six years of discovery by necessity: sitting with people under stress, pulling out requirements they could not articulate themselves, and then rebuilding the process around what I found. Most recently I owned the hardest cases at a U.S. immigration company and coordinated eight paralegals; in February 2026 I left a stable legal career to move into product properly. Since then: a U.S.-standards project management course run by the Yerevan American Corner with the U.S. Embassy (Jul–Aug 2026), second place at HackNation, a month of C at 42 Yerevan, and my own concept for B2B AI voice and text agents built on RAG. Conversational AI is not a box I am ticking for this application — it is what I already chose to work on.

WHY THIS ROLE SPECIFICALLY

- Conversational AI. My own product concept is AI voice/text agents and RAG systems for B2B — vertical-specific, aimed at enterprise clients and tenders. I have spent my own time on where these interfaces break: retrieval quality, handover to a human, and what users actually type versus what you expect them to type.
- Discovery and user research. Client intake was my daily work for six years — structured interviews with people who describe a symptom and not the problem. That is the same muscle a product discovery call uses, and I have run it several hundred times.
- Turning ideas into clear specs. At M&M I rewrote the internal workflow — templates, checklists, hand-offs — and it became how the team works by default. Writing something precise enough that other people can execute it without me is the part I enjoy most.
- Holding parallel state. 200+ live cases and 30+ hearings a week at an arbitration court, up to 12 complex filings at once, live events for up to 3,000 people. A fast-moving team will not overload me.
- Founder-adjacent work. I am used to being the person a principal delegates the ambiguous half of the problem to — I stood in for the team lead at Shamayev and was the escalation point at M&M.
- Time zone. Yerevan is UTC+4: my afternoon is your morning, so a CET/CEST team gets a solid overlap without either of us working nights.
