PROFILE

Eleven years of commercial work that sat underneath other job titles. In a construction and retail group I handled sales alongside operations, prepared and competed in tenders, and negotiated with contractors and suppliers from both sides of the table. At Qanon Construction I owned client communication and sales coordination from first inquiry to agreed scope. Across three years of U.S. immigration legal services I carried the firms' key accounts and its highest-value clients — work where nothing is signed until the client genuinely trusts you, and where over-promising is found out within a week. That is how I sell: ask more than I pitch, commit only to what delivery can survive, and write it into a contract both sides can live with.

One interview is enough — give me 30 minutes and a real problem from your team, and you'll see how I work.

WHAT I BRING TO A SALES TEAM

- Tenders and competitive bids. Prepared and participated in tenders for a construction and retail group — assembling the commercial submission and following it through, not just filing paperwork.
- Full cycle, inquiry to signed scope. At Qanon I ran client communication and sales coordination end to end: first inquiry, qualification, scope agreement, hand-off to delivery, and the follow-up that keeps it from stalling.
- Key accounts. At Shamayev I was trusted with the firm's key accounts and deputized for the team lead; at M&M I owned the highest-value clients end to end, up to 12 in parallel, and was the escalation point when something went wrong.
- Negotiation on both sides of the deal. Sell-side with clients; buy-side with contractors, building-supply vendors, transport and event suppliers. Knowing how the other side builds a price is the most useful thing I bring to a negotiation.
- Contracts do not stall with me. Law degree, six years of civil-contract analysis and claims. I can read the redline myself, spot what legal will object to before they do, and keep a deal moving instead of waiting a week for an opinion.
- Three languages, no interpreter. Armenian native, Russian C2, English C1 — I can run a first meeting, a negotiation and the paperwork in any of the three.
- Volume does not rattle me. 200+ parallel court cases and 30+ hearings a week at an arbitration court. A full pipeline is a smaller problem than that was.
- CRM discipline. amoCRM and Bitrix24 in daily use, plus Jira, Notion and Trello — and a habit of writing the process down so the pipeline survives my vacation.
