PROFILE

Commercial work has run through every job I have held. In a family construction and retail business I handled sales alongside operations, ran public and private tender bids — including an investment project of 11 tenders worth RUB 42M, every site delivered on time — and negotiated with contractors and suppliers from both sides of the table. At Qanon Construction I owned client communication and sales coordination from first inquiry to agreed scope. In U.S. client-services companies I carried key accounts and the highest-value clients; at one of them my process changes raised the share of successful cases by 35%. I am currently COO of SayWhen.am, an AI voice-agent startup, where I bring in corporate clients and manage them across the full engagement cycle. That is how I sell: ask more than I pitch, commit only to what delivery can survive, and write it into a contract both sides can live with.

WHAT I BRING TO A SALES TEAM

- Tenders and competitive bids. Prepared public and private tender bids for a construction and retail business — assembling the commercial submission and following it through to delivery: 11 tenders worth RUB 42M in one investment project, every site accepted with no defects noted.
- Full cycle, inquiry to signed scope. At Qanon I ran client communication and sales coordination end to end: first inquiry, qualification, scope agreement, hand-off to delivery, and the follow-up that keeps it from stalling.
- Key accounts. At Shamayev I was trusted with the firm's key accounts and deputized for the team lead; at M&M I owned the highest-value clients end to end, up to 12 in parallel, and was the escalation point when something went wrong.
- Negotiation on both sides of the deal. Sell-side with clients; buy-side with contractors, building-supply vendors, transport and event suppliers. Knowing how the other side builds a price is the most useful thing I bring to a negotiation.
- Contracts do not stall with me. Law degree and six years of legal practice, including civil-contract analysis and claims. I can read the redline myself, spot what legal will object to before they do, and keep a deal moving instead of waiting a week for an opinion.
- CRM discipline. amoCRM and Bitrix24 in daily use, plus Jira, Notion and Trello — and a habit of writing the process down so the pipeline survives my vacation.
